

Reverend Peters lives a quiet life as a Presbyterian minister in a small eastern Pennsylvania town. He works hard on his sermons despite his family's constant interruptions and "caterwauling". His daughter thinks she's in love with a new, "older" man. His other daughter reads and asks questions about everything. Then, there's Grandma, Peters' wife's mother, who hasn't done very well in the love and happiness department. Into this more-or-less conventional family there comes a great wind from the West, a voice from the past. Cornelius is an old friend from Grandma's school days— a big presence; warm, generous, open and charming... and he thinks Grandma is wonderful. He sweeps them all off their feet, but with him come some forgotten facts about Grandma's past. Cornelius proposes to take Grandma out to his ranch on the Snake River and give her a wonderful new life, but can she leave her family? Will Grandma accept his proposal and ride off in his convertible down the back road to Pocatello?
