The story of a man on the brink of achieving the very highest judicial honor possible— becoming Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court— when he arrives in San Francisco to teach a Summer course at a local law school. Away from Washington and his wife, Margaret, he meets a local artist, Janice Kitteridge. While sitting with her for his portrait, he reveals to her the emptiness of his life. Janice, in turn, gives him a lump of clay and encourages him to sculpt. By working the clay, his emotions begin to unfold, and life becomes new, exciting and fun for him. He wants to be free; to give up the law and live an artist's life...and to love Janice. Janice loves him, too.

When Sorrell's wife unexpectedly comes to town to see his portrait unveiled by the law school, he feels betrayed. He later discovers a truth which forces him to believe that Janice is no different than the other vultures that pick and pull at him.

The Seduction of Thomas Sorrell is a story of seduction by a law school, a painter, and even a man's wife. Yet Sorrell is not blameless; he has shaped and been shaped by his marriage to Margaret and his devotion to the law. He is pushed and pulled by two women vying for his affections. In the end, he has to make a choice, knowing that whatever choice he makes, he will lose.
